Roy Rogers & Trigger Animated Wind-Up Clock

E. Ingraham Co., Bristol, CT – circa 1950s

HISTORY

This charming animated alarm clock was produced by the E. Ingraham Company of Bristol, Connecticut, in the 1950s at the height of Roy Rogers' popularity as America's favorite singing cowboy. The clock face depicts Roy riding Trigger through a painted Western desert scene, with a small sun disc mechanism that rotates behind the mountains as the clock's movement runs — a beloved bit of mid-century character-clock animation. Ingraham was a major American clock manufacturer known for licensed character and novelty clocks throughout this era.

NOTABLE INFORMATION

COLLECTOR NOTES

Roy Rogers & Trigger Ingraham clocks are a well-known category within cowboy/Western character collectibles, with values driven heavily by whether the wind-up movement and animation still function, along with the condition of the painted dial and case finish. Working examples with strong, unfaded dial graphics bring considerably more than parts/repair pieces, which often sell in the $25–$60 range. A confirmed working clock like this one, in reasonably good cosmetic condition, comfortably falls in the $75–$200 range depending on buyer demand.
